President's Letter

I hope that as you read this edition of the magazine you notice as I do the depth and breadth of Mary Baldwin College's academic program and its graduates. To read the essay by Doenges scholar David Bradley is to recognize the intellectual enrichment students on campus now receive through visiting scholars and artists. To read about scientific research of a significant kind, completed or in process by our faculty, is also to recognize the depth of scholarly interactions in our classrooms. In addition, our mission of academic outreach is demonstrated through the students of the Adult Degree Program, who bring varied life experiences and stimulation to one another and to us through their work. To read of the life and times of ADP student Ruth Graham McIntyre and also to contemplate our ADP Green Beret Bill Goodson is to capture once again the significance of the Adult Degree Program that MBC offers and through which we have been highly successful. Mary Baldwin College continues her founding mission, but has extended it and is constantly in the process of enriching it. This magazine continues to celebrate the academic strength of the college.

This magazine also celebrates the greatest fundraising success in our history to date. In my gratitude, I contemplate the many, many people who have joined together to make this success happen. I am convinced that this support comes because of the quality of service we provide. You, our alumnae and friends, are helping us to provide for our students the enrichment of scholars and artists. You are supporting scientific research that benefits each student in the science classroom. You rejoice in the achievement of our adult students. You have seen that MBC is a weighty academic environment. What our faculty and students achieve has inspired you, and generosity is the result. So now, in my appreciation to those who have helped bring about this significant level of giving, I pledge our continuing dedication to high standards, not only in the classroom, but in every aspect of MBC's work. My pledge is that we will continue to be worthy of your support, and I make an equally strong pledge that we shall redouble our efforts to reach even greater heights. I look back with much gratitude and respect and look forward with optimism and energy.

MBC Campaign Goal — $50 Million

It's the largest campaign goal ever set by Mary Baldwin College. In fact, it's the largest campaign goal set by any women's college in Virginia to date.

On October 7, the Board of Trustees announced the beginning of the second, public phase of the Leadership Initiative Campaign. Leadership Initiative Chair Charlotte Jackson Berry '51 announced that a total of over $47 million has already been raised by campaign volunteers, leaving $2.5 million still to raise.

"We originally scheduled our public announcement for April of 2000," Berry noted at a press conference. "But we have gotten such a positive response from Mary Baldwin's friends that we are ahead of schedule in meeting our goal. We decided it was time to share the good news with the entire Mary Baldwin family."

The campaign started out with one extraordinary gift of $5 million.

The same donor committed a second $5 million, and an additional $10 million came from other sources. The campaign then grew into a more ambitious effort as it became clear that there were many additional individuals and foundations who believed in Mary Baldwin's mission and were willing to support the college.

The Leadership INITIATIVE

Endowment and College Projects Benefit from Campaign

The Leadership Initiative Campaign has already begun to show results in tangible improvements in campus facilities and programs:

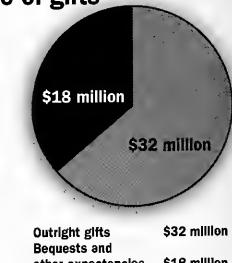

- MBC's historic Administration Building is now beautifully renovated and upgraded.
- Pearce Science Center's building systems have been upgraded, and new scientific equipment is being purchased and installed.
- The Martha Stackhouse Grafton Library has undergone a major interior renovation which includes technological improvements such as wiring the study carrels for Internet access.
- MBC has a state-of-the-art language laboratory and new computer labs for graphic design, theater design and music.
- The Cynthia Haldenby Tyson Endowment for Leadership Development has been established.
- A $3 million endowment supports the Carpenter Health Care Administration Program, making it the only undergraduate program of its type to be endowed at this level.
- A $1.5 million endowment from the Carpenter Foundation, matched with an additional $250,000 from other sources, supports the chaplaincy and the religion discipline; this includes programming such as Quest.

1998-99 Best Fund-Raising Year Ever

Mary Baldwin broke all its previous records in fundraising last year. Prior to the second phase of the Leadership Initiative Campaign, volunteers and staff were busy contacting potential donors – a successful effort that led to the earlier-than-expected campaign announcement in October. As a result, donations rose to more than $8.2 million in 1998-99 compared with not quite $5 million the previous year. The dramatic increase can be attributed to fulfillment of large pledges.

Building the Endowment

The Leadership Initiative will add $16 million to the endowment by 2004 and another $3 million in bequests and other deferred gifts. Since 1985, when Cynthia H. Tyson became president, the endowment has grown from $11 million to almost $32 million, but the college endowment still lags far behind that of other institutions of its size and quality.

"Because MBC's endowment is small, it provides less income than our competitors' endowments," explains President Tyson. "We lack a financial cushion to weather an economic downturn or a drop in admissions. Increasing the endowment is one of the best ways to ensure that Mary Baldwin will continue to thrive in the coming century. The Leadership Initiative is a step in that direction."

"In order to stay competitive and to provide the best education for the future, we must increase our endowment even more," adds Chair of the Board of Trustees Claire "Yum" Arnold '69. "Although this campaign has made great strides, when it reaches its goal, MBC will still have work to do."

Cynthia Haldenby Tyson Endowment for Leadership Development

Thanks to eight women, all alumnae and most current or former trustees, there is a new $2.226 million endowment fund at MBC. The donors have chosen to remain anonymous, but stipulated that the fund be named after MBC President Cynthia Haldenby Tyson.

One of the donors, speaking for the group, said, "We felt this was an appropriate time to come together as a group of alumnae and create this endowment to honor a woman who has given outstanding service and leadership to the college. We hope our gifts will be just the beginning – an inspiration for others to follow."

"I was astonished and deeply touched when these good friends of Mary Baldwin told me of their plans," commented President Tyson. "It was a complete surprise. I am grateful for their faith in me and their commitment to this college."

Dr. Tyson has been president of Mary Baldwin since 1985. Under her leadership, the college established the Master of Arts in Teaching program and the Virginia Women's Institute for Leadership (VWIL). The college is in a stronger position financially than ever before, and enrollment has increased every year during her tenure.

"From its earliest years, Mary Baldwin has prepared women for responsible leadership, first in our traditional program and more recently in the Program for the Exceptionally Gifted and VWIL," said James D. Lott, dean of the college. "This gift will ensure that we can continue that tradition in a very intentional way."

Hamburgers that can kill you. Salads that can put you in the hospital. Poultry and eggs that carry dangerous microbes. Every year contaminated and spoiled foods kill approximately 9,000 Americans and sicken as many as 76 million. Still, most people remain blissfully uninformed about E. coli and other microscopic villains that strike at one of life's most basic requirements – the need for nourishment.

Enter journalist and MBC graduate Nicols Fox, whose first book, Spoiled, has probably done more to educate consumers about foodborne pathogens than any other single source. In this landmark work, Fox presents the unblinking truth about our tainted food supply – how it got that way, how it can initiate serious and even potentially fatal illnesses, and how we can combat the problem.

But wait a minute. Is this the same Nicols Fox who left Mary Baldwin in 1964 with an art degree? Is this the same Nicols Fox who wrote critiques for some of the best art publications in the country, and who at one point exhibited her own paintings in both America and Europe? Is this high priestess of foodborne illness the same person who got the jump on every other journalist in the country in 1990 by first writing about the coming collision between taxpayers and the National Endowment for the Arts?

Yes, and it is the same Nicols Fox who was born in 1942 in what is now MBC's Bailey Residence Hall – then King's Daughters' Hospital. Her mother was from Staunton, but her father was a military man who, like most career military men, changed duty stations with headspinning frequency. For the most part, Fox enjoyed the life of a gypsy and thrived in the wildly contrasting environments of places like Texas, Japan, Germany, France and Taiwan. It was perhaps this potpourri of early experiences that led to some indecision in college.

"When I got to Mary Baldwin, I wanted to do it all," Fox said. "I was interested in theater, writing, economics, history, English and the arts. Of course, I couldn't major in all of them, so I chose to double-major in the visual arts and English – or so I thought." Years later, she discovered she had double-majored in the arts and history.

The confusion is understandable. Fox took so many courses at Mary Baldwin that she graduated six months ahead of schedule. As a portent of things to come, the academic flurry of activity included entering and winning three competitions: a writing contest in her junior year, the program design competition for the production of Medea, and a competition for a spot on stage with Dame Judith Anderson.

"Academically, I was less than brilliant," she said, "so winning these competitions was a rather memorable high point."

After graduation, Fox began her pursuit of a career in the arts. Her first job as coordinator of children's tours at the National Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C. was satisfying though "hard on the feet." Six months into the job she was off on another adventure – marriage – which landed her in Charlottesville, Va., helping put her husband through law school.

Despite having two children and eventually moving with her family for a six-year sojourn in Europe, Fox continued to paint.

"I was very serious about my work, and I produced in almost every medium," she said. "Once my children started school I had more time to devote to my art, and I exhibited some in Europe."

While her marriage wasn't destined to last, Fox's relationship with her art seemed robust. Back in the United States she painted, exhibited frequently in her new hometown of Richmond, and pursued a master's degree. One of her professors told her at the end of the course that she should be writing.

"I'd written several pieces of art criticism for his class, and had always thought of myself as a writer, although I hadn't done more than a little bit of art criticism here and there," Fox said. She added with a laugh that "It reminded me of something I once read about Tom Wolfe, who thought he was a writer and then realized, at age 30, that he hadn't actually written anything."

"Like Wolfe," she added, "I figured I'd better get started."

So she took her professor's advice, attended an art show, wrote a critique and submitted it to a magazine. The piece was accepted.

"I was amazed," Fox said. "I absolutely revere writers, so much so that I was always nervous around them. So here I was getting paid for something I'd written, and my instinct was to feel a bit like an imposter. I still do, to some extent. I keep wondering when I'm going to be found out."

Fox found critical writing so interesting that after nearly 30 years of working as an artist, she lost interest in producing canvases.

"I just found I had nothing more to say as an artist."

However, Fox had plenty to say about art, and did so in such prestigious publications as the New Art Examiner, the Washington Post, Art in America and The Washingtonian. But even more changes lay in store for this newly successful writer, not the least of which was a change of venue.

Fox moved to Maine — a state she said she had always admired — and worked briefly as a copy editor for the Bar Harbor Times. She also took over editorship of a small church periodical, transforming it from an undistinguished publication into the North American Church Press' Most Improved Newspaper of 1988. There was one more stint in Washington, D.C., as associate editor of what is now called American Journalism Review, but the appeal of Maine was strong and eventually she returned for good.

There "it became clear that in order to make a living, I couldn't write solely about the arts," Fox said. "I had to write about a variety of things, and as a result I became more and more of a generalist. But freelancing is hard, and having a lot of different editors is tiresome, so I was on the lookout for a book topic."

That book — the now much-heralded Spoiled — got its start as a magazine article for The Economist about a new and frighteningly virulent form of E. coli named O157:H7. As Fox researched the article, she was drawn ever deeper into the mysterious world of this microscopic killer. Since E. coli is a common bacterium, why was it killing people? How had it gotten into foods around the globe in just a few years?

The information was elusive, but Fox eventually ferreted it out through hundreds of interviews with victims, agricultural specialists, scientists in the Centers for Disease Control, and others. There were many, many hours spent on library research, she said. But she also had help. People from all over the world sent her articles from medical journals and shared their wisdom. What she discovered was disturbing — that changes in our lifestyles, culture, food production, processing and distribution are opening doors to emerging foodborne pathogens. Consumer demand for fast, convenient, novel, exotic and, most of all, cheap foods have a role in producing illnesses from mild diarrhea to organ-destroying and life-threatening infections.

Peddling the book idea was nearly as difficult as researching it had been. Fox went through 26 rejections and two agents before she finally took on the challenge of selling the book herself. It took another six rejections before she discovered an editor as interested as she was in these new foodborne pathogens. But once she did, and once the book was published in 1997, the response was overwhelming.

"Nicol Fox is utterly fearless," wrote Sven Birkerts, author of The Gutenberg Elegies. "She reads and arranges her details until they turn phosphorescent and reveal a trail. Combine Bernstein and Woodward, change the gender, and you'll get the idea. Spoiled is a very important book."

And from author Robin Cook, "I think that Spoiled can do for the food industry what Silent Spring did for the environment."

Instantly Fox became one of the country's experts on foodborne pathogens. The whirlwind of attention most recently whisked her into the role of speaker at a Centers for Disease Control conference and as a presenter at a global food hygiene conference in Finland. Her second book, It Must Have Been Something You Ate: A Practical Guide for Avoiding and Surviving Foodborne Disease, was published July 1. This time, publishers competed to take it to print, and USA Today recently devoted half a page to Fox and the new book.

While appreciative of the attention and professional success her research has generated, Fox says she is ready to move on to new challenges. Her next book will explore why people are resistant to technology.

"At one end of the spectrum you have people who won't use a microwave oven, and at the other end you have people who live in shacks and go without electricity, or, at the extreme, people who express their technophobia violently, like Ted Kaczynski," Fox said. "What's the common thread among them, and why do they feel the way they do? All those people have a story, and I want to bring those stories together." She's already received her first rejection, which at this point merely stirs her blood for another bout with the publishing world.

Although Fox hasn't visited Staunton or Mary Baldwin College in years — "most of my Staunton relatives are gone," she explained — she still has fond memories of the area. In fact, she credits Mary Baldwin with a key element of her success.

"If I hadn't been at a liberal arts college that made me take a science course, would I have sat up straight when I heard E. coli was killing people and said, 'E. coli is in all our guts. It's benign. What's going on here?' The rest is history, as they say."

Does she ever take a break?

"My work is my fun," Fox said. "I love to read and write and talk to people. I live in a delightful little Maine cottage with a cat and a big yellow Labrador retriever, and I just don't see how life could get any better than this."

MBC Reaps the Benefits of IBM Exchange Program

by Katheryn Lenker

Sandy Cureton,
director of development at IBM

Mary Baldwin will have the talents of one of IBM's directors on loan for this academic year, as Sandy Cureton, director of development at IBM, visits the college as part of the IBM Faculty Loan program. While here, she will advise the college on further incorporating technology into the Mary Baldwin curriculum.

"Almost anything you do, you're seeing that access to technology and incorporating technology into the program curriculum makes sense," she said.

Cureton, who will be based in the computer science department, will also teach classes in systems analysis and design, her area of expertise. As a benefit to the entire college, she will also offer her experience and personal contacts in the information technology field to the college as a consultant.

In addition, Cureton said she will serve as a conduit between IBM and the students, sharing information about IBM and what it has to offer, as well as helping students make sure they have the right skills for the technology world.

"Mainly, I want to be a resource to the people at Mary Baldwin," Cureton said.

Though she will spend the year away from her home in Dallas, her husband, and her grandchildren, she said the loan program is important to IBM's corporate philosophy.

"At IBM, there is a very long history and track record [of involvement] in the communities in which they do business," she said. "That's why they say IBM is only as good as its people."

Cureton said both IBM and Mary Baldwin share a strong appreciation for diversity. She sees this at Mary Baldwin in the Adult Degree Program and the Program for the Exceptionally Gifted.

IBM recognizes the value of a varied workforce and has historically promoted this, she said. "It's who's in the workforce. Why would anybody rule out a large portion of their potential workforce?"

Joining IBM in the 1980s was a good choice, Cureton said. The field was not saturated and women were already working as programmers.

"If you could do it, you were accepted," she said. "Competency was the key thing."

This environment has continued at IBM, Cureton added, and today talented, skilled women have many opportunities, though they still face some challenges common to the business world.

Though she hadn't visited Staunton before her interview at Mary Baldwin, the college had an instant appeal, and she already feels she has something in common with it — its Adult Degree Program.

Cureton worked full time at Texas Instruments and raised a family while she earned her bachelor's degree at Tarleton University in Stephenville, TX. She then went on to earn her master's degree in software design and development at Texas Christian University in Fort Worth, TX.

She started working at IBM in 1984 and has held several different positions there, including chief information officer of IBM's software division and her current position, director of development, IBM Customer Relationship Management. Cureton also managed the software development division and worked with the information technology sales and distribution division.

As a complement to the Faculty Loan Program for its employees, IBM also offers a Faculty Internship Program to give college professors the opportunity to learn about the technology industry.

Associate Professor of Business Administration Janet Ewing spent the summer in Atlanta working with the IBM Internal Services division on Y2K preparations for the United States and 13 countries worldwide. The team she was part of tested Germany's Y2K preparedness. She said the experience gave her some valuable ideas for applying project management techniques to the curriculum.

Project management, which involves figuring out what resources are available, the project's timeframe, and how to accomplish the project's goals, is an idea that all students can apply to their majors and future jobs, Ewing said.

"What you see and learn in this kind of internship just can't be replaced. I feel like I can come back and make a difference across the curriculum."

She said the internship helped her better understand the types of skills needed in the technology world and how colleges can prepare students.

Excited about her summer, Ewing is very optimistic about a continued partnership between the college and IBM. "We're in a win-win situation," she said.

On Quitting

by David Bradley

When I was a sixteen, I resigned from my high school basketball team. I'd played basketball since junior high. I had never been a starter, but I'd practiced hard, stayed in training, hung on my coach's every word. This year I was a junior, riding the varsity bench, and, though no threat to the starting five, I believed that if I worked hard over the summer and grew an inch or two, I'd be first string as a senior, or at least the regular sixth man. Meanwhile, I waited my turn, grateful whenever, thanks to injury, foul trouble or a lopsided score, I got a few minutes in a game.

But one Friday night, my coach denied me those few minutes. We were losing bad but fighting hard; four of the nine men who played ahead of me had been disqualified on fouls. When the fifth man fouled out, I started stripping off my warm-up pants. But the coach leaned around me and gestured to the next man — a sophomore.

I was embarrassed and angry. I was also rational. It seemed the coach was telling me I'd gone as far as I could in basketball. Who was I to argue? What would be the point? And what would be the point of practicing several hours a day? I could study more and earn more at my part-time job, thus improving my prospects for college, which was surely more important than playing basketball. Monday afternoon I told my coach, face-to-face, man-to-man, that I was "resigning" from the team. I expected cold indifference. I got frigid fury. "So go," he said. "This team doesn't want quitters."

There is an ideal called "manhood." Like all ideals, it defies direct definition and it is most easily described by its negatives. Manhood is not a license for emotional indifference, hormone-driven selfishness or vacuous pride. Manhood is not uniquely masculine; it seems a "man thing" only because historically more emphasis has been placed on — and more funds invested in — the formal training of males. Certainly it is not about so-called "male" prerogatives; Manhood has no entitlements, all its privileges must be earned, for manhood is not about privilege; it's about obligation. It is not a code of laws or morals; it is not so absolute. Nor is it a code of ethics; its principles, all unwritten, combine the dicta of a dozen sometimes codes — bushido, the Ten Commandments, the codes of chivalry and courtly love, the Beatitudes, the modern Honor Code. Since many of these principles conflict, manhood's "behavioral guidelines" are circular and algebraic. A man's gotta do what a man's gotta do — whatever he decides that is. But one thing is clear: once he starts doing it, he keeps on until it's done ... or until he is. The one thing a man does not do is quit.

No one knows where this never-say-die dictum was born — perhaps among the Spartans or the Amazons — but it was reincarnated in the folk tales of America: of John Paul Jones, who declared that he had not yet begun to fight, and refused to lower the flag even as his ship went down; of Casey Jones, who kept his hand on that brake, even though he knew those locomotives were going to bump; of John Henry, who died with his hammer in his hand. These were not just legends but lessons in manhood; it is no accident that when Casey told his fireman to jump he called the fireman "boy" nor that John Henry's epitaph called him a "steel-drivin' man."

In our less lore-oriented era, boys have been taught this dictum, along other values of manhood, through the medium of organized athletics. Rare is the locker room without a wall adorned with maxims — "When the Going Gets Tough the Tough Get Going" and "Winners Never Quit and Quitters Never Win." Rare is the practice when nobody has to run laps to atone for "giving up on the play." Rare is the pre-game pep-talk or the behind-at-the-half tongue-lashing that does not cite the Eleventh Commandment: Thou Shalt Not Quit. So what if they're stronger, swifter, smarter and ahead, 84-3; It Ain't Over 'Til It's Over, and It Ain't Over 'Til the Fat Lady Sings. The constant message is: Go hard, and keep on going hard until the whistle blows. If you don't, you're a quitter, which is worse than being a loser — though you'll inevitably be a loser, too.

To some, this may sound silly. But it's necessary and true. You must be taught to persevere; it does not come naturally. And you must learn to persevere. If you give up easily, you are unlikely to achieve anything worth even your own remembering. A long struggle, regardless of outcome, can be a memorable achievement in itself. And if you do struggle, you may achieve more than you dreamed possible, without even realizing what you're doing. If you keep your hand on the plow and your eyes on the prize, you may achieve things the whole world will remember.

I had been instructed in perseverance long before I entered my first locker room. My father, a historian, was an admirer of Winston Churchill, and quoted the "Never, Never, Never Give Up" speech at me so often I felt like a student at the Harrow School for Boys. He was also a minister, and at least once a year would base a sermon about Christian constancy on a text from Job: "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him." But unlike maxims of sport, teachings at the dinner table or preachings from the pulpit offered no opportunity for immediate, practical and physical application. I'd sung the hymn "We Shall Not Be Moved" dozens of times, but first really understood it when, while playing Little League Football, I heeded the coach's shout and screwed my belly-button to the ground — and found that I could make the tackle. And it was my basketball coach who drove the lesson of perseverance home.

He was neither so exegetical and so metaphysical as my father, nor as ironic as Yogi Berra or Doug Moe, but he had the alliterative eloquence of a Marine drill instructor and the facility with insult of a Bedouin. We called his behind-at-half orations "butt-burners" and tried to laugh them off, but we feared them, in part because his actual language was so benign. Without profanity and with only occasional vulgarity, he could make you feel God-damned. He didn't swear at you, he cursed you. That's how I felt as I walked out of the gym that day: cursed, forever and all time.

For though I still felt it was a good decision, I realized what my coach said might be true. I could call it resignation, but the fact was, I had quit. That didn't prove I was a quitter; it did raise that possibility. If I wasn't a quitter, I had to somehow prove a negative. The only way to do that was to never, ever, quit again.

For the next dozen years I abandoned almost nothing. When I did give up on something, I was consumed by guilt and doubt. At first I was trying to prove — or disprove — something, but gradually my motivation became more inner-directed and positive; I was trying to be something — a man, for want of an ungendered term. I understood manhood had other imperatives, but to never quit was the most clear, and, I decided, the most fundamental.

During those years I accomplished things of which, at sixteen, I had but dimly dreamed. I gained entrance to an Ivy League University. I paid my own way with scholarships and part-time and summer work. I graduated with honors. I won a fellowship to study abroad. I completed six marathons and three books, one of which was actually published and even favorably reviewed.

I was neither impressed nor intimidated by the critics' compliments. I knew I wasn't talented or brilliant; I'd just hung in there, done it over and over, until the book was good. I knew my next novel would be better, because I'd keep working on it until it was. I didn't think I knew it all; I did think, not without reason, that I had a few things figured out. Then my father fell ill.

His ailment had an unknown etiology and a fancy, hyphenated name: Guillain-Barré Syndrome. It produced a paralysis in the lower limbs that gradually ascended the spinal column and affected every nerve — even those controlling involuntary muscles. The diaphragm and lungs had to be assisted by respirators; pacemakers had to be employed to keep the heart beating. Pneumonia was a constant threat. Cardiac arrest was common. Guillain-Barré was painful and terrifying and incurable, but not fatal; patients died, but as a result of secondary complications. And after about eleven weeks, it ran its course and went away. The ascending paralysis descended; muscle function returned. Though rehabilitation was required, full recovery was the norm. You could survive Guillain-Barré; all you had to do was ... hang in there.

I hung in there. I was teaching at a university three hundred miles away, but each week I went to my father's bedside. Supposedly, I was cheering him up; actually, I was cheering him on. I cajoled him to eat, though he had little appetite and swallowing was hard. I coaxed him to sit up in a chair to help ward off pneumonia, though it caused him serious pain. I ordered him to accept the agonizing ministrations of the physical therapist. I told him he had to fight, and measured his resolve with a test I'd seen the neurologists use; I'd lay my index finger across his palm and tell him squeeze. "Come on, Pop," I'd say, "make a fist and squeeze." He squeezed. But each week his grip grew weaker. I told him he was doing fine.

Though I despaired, I hid it; even when pneumonia became not a threat but a fact, I refused to give up hope. But one day my father refused to squeeze, refused to make a fist, refused to raise either hand. "Come on, Pop," I said. "How are you going to fight this thing if you won't put up your dukes?"

"David," he whispered, "I'm not going to make it."

I charged out of the hospital, went storming through the streets, mentally cursing my father who had quoted Churchill at me, but who now failed to follow Job—my father the quitter. Well, I decided, after an hour of angry ambulation, maybe he was a quitter, but I was not.

I found the public library, looked up a collection of Dylan Thomas's poetry. I memorized a verse from Thomas' exhortation to his father: "Do Not Go Gentle Into That Good Night."

And you, my father, there on the sad height,
Curse, bless me now with your fierce tears I pray.
Do not go gentle into that good night,
Rage, rage against the dying of the light.

Then I went stomping back to the hospital, intending to give my father a poetic pep talk that would put both his sermons and my old coach's butt-burners to shame.

But when I stalked back into his room, I saw my father lying, eyes closed and motionless. I thought that he was dead until I saw his chest slowly rise and fall, and his lips move microscopically. Then I realized the hands that he'd refused to move were now folded on his breast. And it came to me that some things a man must do can't be done with clenched hands.

My father did not make it. And the fact is, he quit. And I did too—although not easily. But when he lay in Intensive Care, shaking with pain and convulsions, when all his vital organs—heart, lungs, kidneys, liver, brain, for all I knew—had given out or given up, when the doctors said, dialysis and defibrillation, I said, Do Not Resuscitate. Feed him, of course, and pace his heart, and even help him breathe. But when he decides to go, let him go—tell that fat lady it's time to sing.

I remember how they looked at me, those doctors, all men but one. I remember how that lone woman left our meeting and went into my father and gently squeezed his hand. I remember how my mother sat in the Intensive Care waiting room, often silent, but somehow serene. I remember how God-awful guilty I felt. I remember thinking, Lord, ain't this manhood thing a bitch?

That was twenty years ago. In those years, I've changed a lot. In the wake of my father's funeral, I did a lot of thinking about cultural inculcations, and the way that my father had died and the way that I was living.

I thought about the maxims men live by and the promises men make—about the locker room rhetoric and heroic poetry and mottoes couched in Latin and carved in stone; about oaths of office and vows of matrimony and all our various swearings-in—all of which come down to pledges that, no matter what the Universe serves up by way of dissuasion, nothing will make us quit. Since life lacks the artifice of sport, men literally do die trying—the real-life referee's whistle is the Reaper's scythe.

I thought about all that I'd done between my coach's accusation and my father's death. I'd done what I had to do, the way I had to do it; I had been productive and worked with honor; I had made no tragic mistake.

But I'd paid a price for perseverance. I'd thrown good efforts after bad. I'd allowed myself to be exploited by employers who realized I would never walk off a job and by lovers who sensed I could not leave them, especially if they charged me with "giving up on the relationship." Rather than resign privately, I'd accepted public dismissal. I'd allowed myself to be cuckolded rather than admit an affair had failed. I hadn't quit; I also hadn't learned to cut my losses. Instead, I'd learned to protect myself by avoiding riskier commitments; a man doesn't have to keep on doing what he never said he'd do. But to risk, no less than to persevere, is an essential of manhood; my living up to the one did not excuse my failing at the other.

I decided what I had to do was learn how to quit. To learn when to hold 'em and when to fold 'em. To know when to empty the bench to give the scrubs their minutes. To allow myself to pray for the cup to be removed. I am not much good at it yet. I won't quit trying, of course.

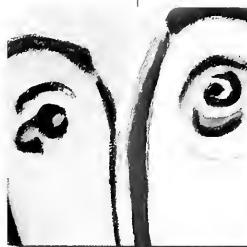

Society has changed a lot, too, during those twenty years. The training of young men has become the true "co-education;" the majority of college—and law school—students are women now. Which means that in the coming century more and more women will be taking the oaths of office. Thus, it is good and vital that sport is now becoming more and more a "girl thing." Young women, no less than young men, must be taught to persevere. Young women, no less than young men, must be inculcated with the values of manhood. If they are to achieve and lead, and if we are all to prosper, they must meet the standard Churchill set for those pubescent boys at Harrow.

Yet young women, perhaps more urgently than young men, must also learn how and when to walk away. The kinds of exploitations I survived can be, for women, far more dangerous and devastating; at the same time, our half-enlightened society does not always understand that a woman may stand on a burning deck, not out of weakness, but out of strength.

I watch women, now, play basketball. I watch their coaches prance. I don't wonder what gets said in the ladies' locker room; I already know. But I hope what gets said in there allows for the understanding that there is a time for resolution and a time for acceptance, a time for hanging in there, a time for letting go—and occasions when you are best-advised to haul ass out of Dodge.

As for me, I sit up in the bleachers and ponder what came to me as I watched my dying father pray: that he who can but rave the fall of night forsakes the sunset.

Growing up Graham

By Ruth Graham McIntyre ADP 200

The Rev. Billy Graham with daughter Ruth Graham McIntyre.

I was born into a family with a long spiritual heritage on both sides for many generations. Not only was it a Christian family but a famous one. Being from a famous family has its responsibilities, burdens, pleasures and expectations; being from a famous religious family intensifies those.

My childhood was unusual. At the time, I was unaware of that, but when I had a family of my own, I began to see how different my childhood really was. I had wonderful opportunities to travel, meet interesting people, make friends all over the world and be a member of a dynamic family that has made a real difference in the world.

I was the middle of five children and grew up in a small community populated by elderly retired missionaries. I was surrounded by kind, gentle, older Christians. The Sabbath was strictly held. Television and shopping were prohibited, even buying gasoline. We could not read the newspaper or funny papers. But instead of feeling deprived, we felt that the day was a special one. Church was always at 11:00, sitting beside my grandparents, whom I adored.

Following church, my mother prepared a big noon meal for any stray people she could round up. At 3:00, we gathered in the living room to listen to my father's radio broadcast while we consumed our weekly candy bar and soft drink. Later in the evening, some of the retired missionaries would gather around the piano and we would have a "hymn sing." (My children are amazed that I know all the stanzas for so many old hymns!) In my home, hymns were the lullabies. Hymns played regularly over the radio or stereo.

My parents stressed Bible memorization and personal, daily devotional time. Early in the morning my mother rose to have her own devotional time and often at night if I tiptoed down to her room, I found her on her knees praying. Her Bible was always open on her desk. I knew that God was my parents' companion in all circumstances and that they depended on Him. Mornings and evenings, we gathered as a family to have Bible reading and prayer. Conversations were peppered with Scriptural references. Evangelism was the heart-throb of my family due to personal conviction that man was a sinner and in need of salvation that only came through Jesus Christ. I learned early that Christianity was not a religion but a relationship.

At the age of about seven, I remember kneeling beside my bed with my mother and asking Jesus to come into my heart. When I was 11 years old, my father and I attended a church revival to hear one of his friends preach. At the end of the service the preacher invited those who wanted to make a public commitment to Christ to come forward to the altar. I remember wanting to go but being self-conscious because of my father's presence. Finally, I stepped forward. It was the first time I had acknowledged my faith publicly.

Those who have read my father's autobiography have commented on how often he was gone from home. Indeed, he was. But I do not remember resenting it or feeling deprived. My life was full and happy, as I was surrounded by fun-loving friends and family. Mother never complained about his absences from home but was interested in and supportive of his worldwide ministry. We children took on her attitude. While my home community had little diversity, I was aware of being part of a diverse global family.

Growing up, it was accepted that wherever we went with our father, there would be a stir. People recognized him and invariably came up to speak with him or ask for a photograph or autograph. I didn't resent this — I was proud of my father and realized how much he meant to other people—but it did make me very self-conscious.

My grandparents lived nearby and were a powerful influence in my life. They had been medical missionaries to China for 25 years. My mother grew up in a missionary compound in China and went to high school in what is now North Korea. My grandparents adored me. Over and over again they told me the exciting stories of China and the work God had done there — these were my bedtime stories.

My early education was in a private school or with private tutors. When my parents finally decided to put me in the local public school, I felt like a misfit and was self-conscious because I didn't know the schoolyard subtleties of life outside my happy cocoon. Consequently, a feeling of inadequacy has stayed with me all my life. I later returned to private education.

My junior year of high school, my parents took me out of the co-ed boarding school I had been attending in Florida. The school had a strong religious foundation and many strict rules. Those who ran the school admired my parents and treated me like a princess; many exceptions were made for me.

While I had felt safe and happy at the school in Florida, my parents thought it best to move me to an all girls' boarding school on Long Island. It had been billed as a Christian school, but it was only Christian in principle. The students were mostly from privileged, secular New York homes and were "problem girls." I felt as if I had been thrown to the wolves. The old sense of inadequacy haunted me. My parents were in Europe and I was homesick! In addition, I had been diagnosed with mononucleosis and was isolated from the other students.

During this year, I began to claim my faith as my own and felt I was starting on my own spiritual journey. My parents had taught me that Christianity is not a cookie cutter faith. God has made us each different, and yet we are all one. Neither my mother nor my father are rigid or judgmental—they have always shown tolerance without compromise and the ability to accept and respect those from other walks of life and other faiths. I have learned from them to "agree to disagree" and not to make disagreements personal. That year I had to put what I had learned from them into practice.

I grew up surrounded by people who talked about how God was their strength and comfort; I expected Him to be no less for me. I came through that year at boarding school stronger, and something began to stir as I became aware that there were other ways of looking at life. Fine, solid Christians were on every side of most issues.

At the end of that year, which had been miserable on several levels, my parents decided to send me on to college a year early. A Christian college in Massachusetts agreed to take me as a freshman on the condition that I finish my senior year of high school by correspondence. (I wish there had been a Program for the Exceptionally Gifted then such as Mary Baldwin has now!) So at 16, never having seen the campus or met any of the students, I entered college. Fortunately, I had a wonderful roommate from Maine who came from a totally different background from mine and her family adopted me as one of its own. I began to experience a larger world from the one in which I had grown up and found it stimulating, but this phase of my life was not to last.

I was reared to be a homemaker. No career goals were encouraged or implanted. I was taught that raising children and satisfying a husband were all that were necessary to be fulfilled. I had wanted to become a nurse but my father, without explanation, said no. At eighteen, I left college and went from obeying an authoritarian father to submitting to a domineering husband. My life was continually defined by my relationship to a man.

I easily fell into the routine of homemaker and mother, following my mother's example. I loved being the mother of three and continued with my spiritual routine of daily Bible reading and prayer, using any spare time to organize women's retreats for evangelism and spiritual growth. Difficulties arose in my marriage, but my husband and I had the opportunity to purchase part of the farm that once belonged to my great-grandfather in Fort Defiance, Virginia. I was delighted to be going back to my "roots" (my mother's parents were originally from Waynesboro, Virginia).

Shortly after we moved, my neat little world fell apart. I discovered my husband had been having an affair for five years. At first I resorted to the familiar pattern of denial, covering the problem over with spiritual platitudes. I hid the truth from everyone, humiliated that anyone would find out, including my family. I prayed. I fasted. I forgave. I claimed Bible promises. I did all that I had been taught to do. Nothing made it go away. Physically, this cover-up began to take its toll, and I realized I had to get professional help or I would have a breakdown. I was raised to believe that God and the Bible were all you needed; to go to a psychologist meant you had a spiritual problem. In spite of fear that someone would find out, I sought professional counseling. I went through a difficult period of depression, and eventually the marriage ended. Certainly this was nothing I had ever expected to happen to me.

Not only did an emotional crisis take shape but a deep spiritual crisis. I had been told all my life that if you served God, he would take care of you. Over my front door since the day I was married had hung the Bible verse: "If you make the Most High your dwelling – even the Lord, who is my refuge – then no harm will befall you, no disaster will come near to your tent" (Psalm 91:9-10). I had taken that verse quite literally. I had been serving God, being faithful to what I thought He wanted me to be. I felt that He had let me down. I was bewildered and hurt. I became disappointed as I claimed His promises for my life; I truly wrestled with what I expected – the way I thought God would fulfill those promises. I questioned His love for me. I questioned the truthfulness of His promises. I questioned my spiritual foundations. Nothing seemed secure for me anymore. All my pat answers were gone. What did I believe? Who did I believe? The emotions would heal long before the spiritual questions settled.

My parents were loving and supportive throughout the ordeal but they were unprepared for this. I was told that if I got a divorce I would hurt millions of people, as if my actions would affect people's attitudes toward God. Quite a heavy responsibility! One summer I spent a week reading through the Old Testament. I read about how the Israelites had done just about everything wrong, yet God's purpose was not thwarted; His plans kept moving right along. The Israelites may have come through worse-for-wear, but God was doing just fine! I came to understand that I was not responsible for His reputation; He was big enough to handle each situation and turn the hard circumstances of life into something He could use. Through this experience, I began to shed my childish faith, experience a deeper understanding of grace and mature in my theology.

At mid-life, I found I had to reinvent myself. It was at this point that I decided to finish my college education and a friend told me about the Adult Degree Program at Mary Baldwin. At the college I found a community of seekers. I have enjoyed my relationships with students, faculty and staff. I have been stimulated and challenged and stretched by my studies. The innovative Quest program has given me the opportunity to dialogue with younger women from varied backgrounds and faiths who want to incorporate their spiritual life into their everyday experiences.

My parents are proud of the fact that I decided to go back to college. When he is in town visiting, my father often attends campus events with me. When I graduate this year, I will be the first of his three daughters to finish college.

One of the drawbacks of being a Graham is that I constantly battle the expectations of other people – trying to measure up. Slowly I have come to accept the fact that I don't have to meet those expectations. I have grown up a Graham, but I am now able to appreciate being myself.

See How They Run— Student Research Project a Winner

by Jacquelyn K. Beals, associate professor of biology

In mid-February 1998, Shaunta Poe '99 received both good news and bad. The good news was that she had been nominated for the Minority Student Summer Research Program sponsored by the Virginia Foundation for Independent Colleges (VFIC). The bad news was that she had less than a week to design a research project!

In addition to being a typically busy biology major, Shaunta was also president of the MBC Student Government Association. Despite the many demands of her SGA presidency, she wanted to pursue the possibility of funding for summer research. At the suggestion of her advisor, Shaunta scanned recent issues of Science News for inspiration. Of greatest interest to her was an article entitled "Blocking Multiple Sclerosis in a Mouse Model" by Science News staff writer Damaris Christensen (who turned out to be a 1990 MBC biology graduate who had gone on to a career in science journalism).

Shaunta sent a brief research proposal to VFIC and waited. A month later she learned that she, as well as MBC's other nominee, Mallessa James PEG '99, had been selected as a 1998 VFIC research student. The award required a commitment to 10 weeks of summer research and carried a $2,500 stipend funded by duPont. Shaunta laughs now as she recalls how uncomplicated her project sounded. She proposed to produce symptoms of multiple sclerosis in mice, determine the physical effects of treatment by observing mouse behavior, and then extend the study by "over-anesthetizing the mice and taking slides of their spinal cords. I will examine the amount of myelin...histologically using light and electron microscopy." As Shaunta soon learned, she had taken on a very demanding project.

How does a scientist produce multiple sclerosis in mice? Multiple sclerosis (MS) is one of the most common diseases of the central nervous system in humans. It involves inflammation and scarring within the brain and spinal cord, resulting in destruction of myelin, the white fatty sheath that covers nerve fibers much as insulation covers electrical wires. When myelin is destroyed, nerve fibers lose their ability to conduct electrical impulses, resulting in muscular weakness, fatigue, paralysis and loss of sensation. MS probably results from an autoimmune response that causes a person's body to destroy its own myelin. Some people experience periods of temporary recovery, while others show progressive deterioration. Yet no bacteria or viruses transmit MS. There is no handy way to inject the mice with MS germs and wait 24 hours. So back to the question — how can MS be produced in mice?

Fortunately, a method exists. The Science News article described the work of Dr. D.C. Hooper at Thomas Jefferson University in Philadelphia. Hooper induces a disease resembling MS by giving a series of injections to sensitize the mice to their own myelin. Their immune systems then attack the myelin, resulting in varying degrees of paralysis. Hooper's journal articles emphasize the behavioral symptoms and treatments of the resulting disease, called experimental allergic encephalomyelitis (EAE). Shaunta wanted to induce EAE, then focus her investigation on microscopic changes in the myelin which accompany the weakness and paralysis. Hooper was looking at behavior changes; Shaunta would be looking at changes at the cellular level.

By mid-June 1998, twelve mice susceptible to EAE had arrived from a supplier in Maine. Guinea pig myelin basic protein was obtained from a company in Missouri. Guinea pig myelin is foreign enough to be attacked by the mouse immune system; yet it resembles mouse myelin enough that the mice become sensitized to their own myelin as well. Shaunta also ordered pertussis toxin, which intensifies the immune response to guinea pig myelin. (By a similar process, a person's food allergies often worsen during hay fever season — the immune system is so cranked up that a moderate insult produces an intense response.)

In early July, Shaunta injected her mice with the combination of substances that should induce EAE. One week passed, then another and another. By now, Shaunta and her advisor were in regular e-mail contact with Dr. Hooper and his research assistant, Rhonda Kean. Amid the information they generously shared were two facts of particular interest: first, mice are much less likely to develop EAE with paralysis during the summer, despite being housed in windowless, air conditioned labs. This is intriguing, as MS occurs more often in people living in temperate rather than tropical climates; the further from the equator, the more common is human MS. The reasons underlying this pattern are presently unknown.

Second, commercially obtained guinea pig myelin often yields erratic results. Hooper had produced EAE far more reliably using homemade myelin basic protein prepared in his laboratory at TJU. He volunteered to send Shaunta enough to repeat her experiment.

But now it was August, with no prospect of completing the study before classes resumed. Shaunta and her advisor agreed that the project was too interesting and they had worked too hard to give up after one try. So, in mid-September, with Dr. Hooper's myelin basic protein and nine new mice, Shaunta undertook her project for the second time.

Three weeks after the injections, the mice developed EAE. Their symptoms ranged from tail weakness, to hind limb weakness, to complete hind limb paralysis.

Over the next two weeks, Shaunta anesthetized mice showing various degrees of paralysis and prepared their spinal cords for microscopic examination. Initially, the myelin in their spinal cords looked depressingly similar. However, the mouse with complete hind limb paralysis showed more "wrinkled" myelin than the control mouse did. Could this be a sign of EAE? Or was it an artifact of tissue preparation? Shaunta wanted to quantify changes in the myelin, but she couldn't let wishful thinking influence her results, so her advisor masked the slides to conceal their mice of origin. Keeping her fingers crossed, Shaunta counted the number of nerve fibers surrounded by wrinkled vs. smooth myelin insulation in three areas of each spinal cord.

The moment of truth arrived three days later when the slides were unmasked. The results were consistent enough to make all the work worthwhile:

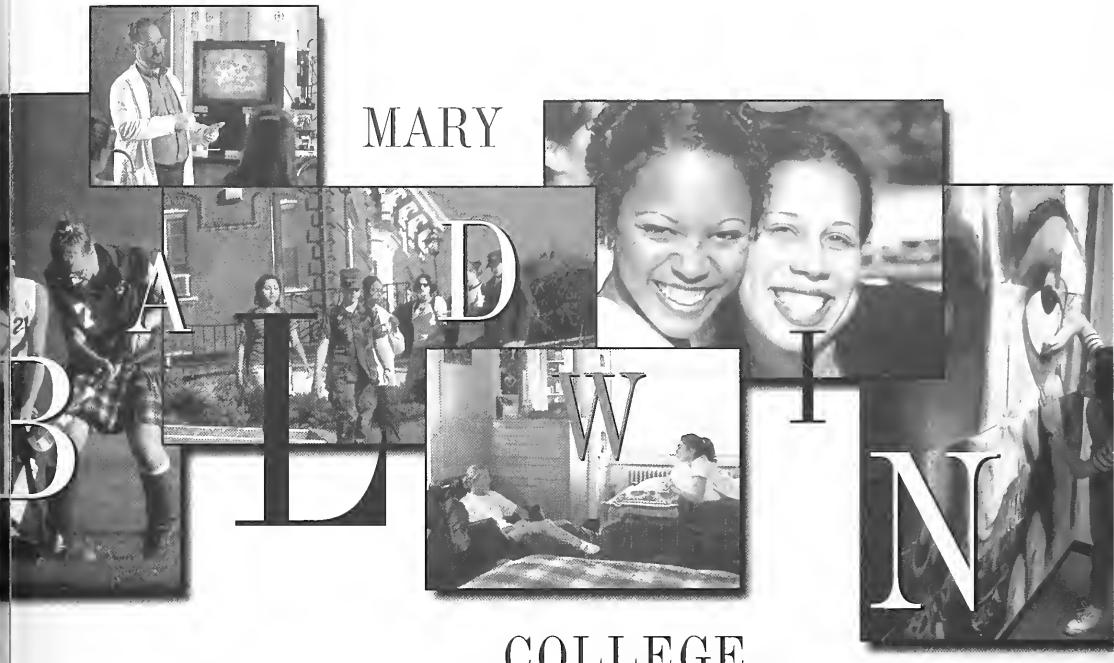

- the control mouse showed only 12-13% wrinkled myelin in the three areas examined;
- the mouse with tail weakness showed 56-71% wrinkled myelin;
- the mouse with hind limb weakness showed 79-84% wrinkled myelin;
- the mouse with hind limb paralysis showed 66-93% wrinkled myelin.

Shaunta's statistical analysis confirmed a strong relationship between the amount of abnormal myelin and the degree of paralysis observed in each mouse.

For her senior thesis defense, Shaunta utilized PowerPoint, an overhead projector, an image of one of her microscope slides (displayed on a video monitor), and a videotape she had made of the mice demonstrating their EAE symptoms. Her thesis defense demonstrated how much she had learned about research in general and EAE in particular since the day, more than a year earlier, when a Science News article by another Mary Baldwin biology major first caught her eye.

Shaunta graduated in May 1999, but the tissue she prepared was examined more closely during the summer of 1999 with MBC's transmission electron microscope. The results will be shared with Dr. Hooper, whose generous help and advice were deeply appreciated.

Meanwhile, MBC's link to Thomas Jefferson University is ongoing. Another biology major, Tu-Anh Bui '00, was accepted into their 1999 summer research program. She is currently drawing on the knowledge and technical skills acquired at TJU in designing her own senior research project.

The Annual Fund is made up of thousands of contributions, large and small, that go toward the general operation of the college.

Annual Fund Awards

Through these class awards, we recognize the enthusiastic support of our alumnae. The awards are presented annually at Founders' Day and are named in honor of past presidents of Mary Baldwin College. Class representatives accept the awards on behalf of their classes. We commend the classes listed below for their outstanding loyalty to the Annual Fund and to Mary Baldwin.

The Fraser Bowl

Awarded to the class presenting the largest gift to the 1998-99 Annual Fund, the Fraser Bowl was secured by the Class of 1946, which contributed $65,753 this year.

Churches

Mary Baldwin College was founded in 1842 with the support of the Presbyterian Church. This bond continues today. Individual churches and the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic demonstrate their support of the college's educational progress through contributions to the Annual Fund. Many thanks go to these churches for their donations.

Young Alumnae & Senior Impact

Young Alumnae Giving Clubs

The Young Alumnae Program was established in 1994 in an effort to increase Annual Fund participation in the four most recently graduated classes. With giving clubs suited to a recent graduate's budget and a strong emphasis on participation at any level, the Young Alumnae Program has involved more young alumnae than ever in the Annual Fund. Together, the classes of 1995, 1996, 1997 and 1998 had an average participation rate of 18% and gave a total of $4,567 to the 1998-99 Annual Fund.

The 1998-99 Gladys Award goes to the Class of 1995 with 30% of the class participating in the 1998-99 Annual Fund. This award is presented annually to the young alumnae class with the highest percentage of participation in the Annual Report.

The Senior Impact Program

The Senior Impact Program was established this year as a way to increase the participation in the Annual Fund among seniors. This program encourages each member of the senior class to make an impact on Mary Baldwin for future generations by buying 30 seconds or 1-5 minutes of funding to run the college. The Class of 1999 gave $860.50 to the 1998-99 Annual Fund to buy 19 minutes and 7.3 seconds of funding to run MBC.

Virginia Foundation for Independent Colleges

VFIC

Every year Mary Baldwin College benefits significantly from the generosity of business, industry and other private sources across the Commonwealth through the efforts of the Virginia Foundation for Independent Colleges (VFIC). In 1998-99, the VFIC distributed over $3 million, the largest annual distribution in the organization's history. Mary Baldwin College received $194,411.27 as the 1998-99 VFIC share.

The VFIC is a fund-raising organization established by and for the benefit of its members, 15 private colleges and universities. Business and community leaders assist in obtaining contributions from the corporate community. These monies are distributed each June to member institutions according to a standard formula: 40% on the basis of undergraduate enrollment and 60% divided equally. VFIC has been recognized nationally as the premier independent college fund among the 38 similar associations in terms of its annual distributions.

Planned Giving

The Kiracofe Society

The Kiracofe Society was established in 1987 to recognize and honor those who have included Mary Baldwin College in their estate plans. These gifts include charitable remainder trusts, charitable lead trusts, charitable gift annuities, life estates in real property, life insurance and bequests. They may be unrestricted (to be spent for the most pressing needs of the college) or designated for endowment.

Applications for Traditional Program up for Second Year

Two hundred ninety-five freshmen arrived on campus on August 25th to begin settling into their dorms. This healthy enrollment can be attributed to a rise in applications for the second year in a row. Applications rose from 730 in 1997, to 1,047 in 1998. This year the college received 1,185 applications. Campus visits were also up for the second year. 1997 saw 820 families visit campus; 1998 had 918; 948 families have visited so far this year.

VWIL Applications up for Third Year

The Virginia Women's Institute for Leadership had an increase in applications for the third consecutive year. The program received 74 applications for the 1999-2000 school year, an increase of almost 20% from 1998. Forty-three new cadets have enrolled for the fall. School officials attribute the increase to VWIL's growing reputation nationally.

Women's Colleges Conference Promotes Career Development

The second career development conference for students, "Focus on Women and Work," was held at Sweet Briar College on November 13, 1999. Mary Baldwin joined Hollins University, Randolph-Macon Woman's College and Sweet Briar College for the one-day conference. Three MBC alumnae participated in the program this year: Mary Melissa Derby '88, Alice Blair '86 and Betty Hecht '68. The keynote speaker, Laura Groppe, is the founder of Girl Games, Inc., a multimedia entertainment company dedicated to providing young women with interactive entertainment. Primarily geared toward students and college staff, the conference is designed to provide information about careers and work-related issues, as well as opportunities for networking and mentorship.

Expert in International Economics was Phi Beta Kappa Visiting Scholar

Thomas Schelling, Distinguished University Professor of Economics at the University of Maryland at College Park visited Mary Baldwin November 10-12 as the Phi Beta Kappa Visiting Scholar and gave a lecture on November 11. Schelling is an expert in the field of national income behavior, international economics and arms control, and the economics of energy. He is a distinguished member of the National Academy of Science and the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

On-Campus ROTC

With the arrival of Army Captain Joni Lacentra, Mary Baldwin will have its first full-time ROTC instructor on campus. Lacentra will provide classes for Army ROTC upperclassmen.

Parent e-Newsletter Launched

MBCSpan's first issue was e-mailed to 174 parents of current traditional, VWIL and PEG students in mid-October. Its purpose is to provide parents of on-campus and commuter students with up-to-the-minute news and information.

"When there is important news, good or bad, we'll share it right away," promises Crista Cabe, associate vice president for college relations. "We'll send MBCSpan as often as necessary to communicate with parents about what's happening on campus."

Parents who would like to subscribe to MBCSpan should send an e-mail to <colrel@mbc.edu>, put "Subscribe MBCSpan" in the subject line, and include the following information in the body of their message: parents' first and last names; daughter's full legal name; and parents' full mailing address to help MBC avoid confusion due to similar names.

Addendum

In response to the article on MBC entrepreneurs in the spring issue of The Mary Baldwin Magazine, Carol Eliason, president of Learning in Retirement at Edison Community College in Punta Gorda, FL, wrote to tell us that she first brought the idea of entrepreneurship to MBC almost a decade ago. She said, "I had a contract with the United States Small Business Administration to develop a counseling model and a 30-hour curriculum for women. After developing the model, while at the American Association of Community Colleges (1976-1985), I was invited by Mary Baldwin to bring it to Staunton as part of its continuing education program. As requested, I did so. In addition, I had consultations with the academic faculty."

Record Donations to Mary Baldwin College in 1998-99

Mary Baldwin College officials report a record level of donations for the college's most recent fiscal year, 1998-99, which closed on June 30. MBC raised a grand total of $8,210,340.27 in cash compared with $4,914,795.04 in 1997-98.

Mark Atchison, vice president for institutional advancement, said, "Mary Baldwin is nationally recognized as a leading liberal arts college in the South. We are grateful to the many alumnae and friends of this college who invested in MBC last year. Their generosity made it a record year."

Support for our Annual Fund has exceeded $1.3 million for the second year in a row. In addition, the college received over $4.75 million in gifts to the endowment compared to $1.13 million last year. Gifts to endowment are invested and provide permanent financial support.

Not included in these totals are planned major gifts, which have also increased dramatically over recent years. Martha Masters '69, director of planned giving, said, "Donors across the country are realizing the financial benefits of coordinating their financial planning — retirement or estate planning, for instance — with their charitable giving." Planned gifts involve assets other than cash and can result in benefits to the donors and their families as well as to charitable organizations.

Grafton Library Outfitted for the New Century

By Lis Chabot, college librarian

Discussions began in late 1998 on possible upgrades for the Martha S. Grafton Library. While the building is an imposing structure with abundant natural light and open space, the interior surfaces and furnishings were showing the effects of 32 years of daily use. A renovation committee, which included alumnae, staff and students, met in March and June of 1999. The purpose of the renovation project was to reconfigure the library facility to better meet the challenges of the 21st century, while at the same time creating an aesthetically pleasing and functional environment.

In the last decade, much has changed in the methods and mediums by which libraries provide materials and services to their users. An effective academic library must offer 1) ready access to a wide variety of print and digital information resources, 2) comfortable spaces for collaborative and independent work, and 3) top-notch library instructional services. Working with an interior designer, the renovation committee focused on the functional aspects of the building. Once the design elements were selected, renovations began in mid-June with a targeted completion date of late September. Throughout the summer, the building was a hub of dust, noise, and activity as painters, wiring crews, window tinters and carpet layers worked on various aspects of the project.

General renovations included replacing the carpet on the main and mezzanine floors, as well as tinting the large windows on the main floor to reduce UV ray damage to the books and furnishings. In addition, comfortable seating areas for reading and browsing were created by reconfiguring several library stack units. A separate group study space has also been developed. In addition, the individual study carrels on the main and the mezzanine floors have been wired for internet access. The library instruction classroom has been upgraded and reconfigured to enhance the library's information literacy class and additional instructional sessions.

With the completion of the renovation, the library is once again a facility where the interior of the building complements the original exterior design of the building and where we are able to provide library services in a modern, welcoming environment.

To see the renovation in progress, see www.mbc.edu/resources/library/renovate.html.

In an updated Grafton Library, soft lighting, rich earthtones and comfortable seating set an atmosphere conducive to study.

LearnInc on a Roll

LearnInc, an outreach of the Adult Degree Program that brings education and training to Virginia business and industry, is proving more successful than even its most optimistic projections. It exceeded its revenue goal by about $16,000 last year, its first full year of operation.

Some of the companies LearnInc worked with include American Electric Power, Augusta County Service Authority, Bausch-Lomb, Bell Atlantic, Chandler/Franklin/O'Brien, Comprehensive Family Services, DuPont, IBM, Kroger, Lewis-Gale Medical Center, MBC Managers Group, McKee Foods, Virginia Metalcrafters, Virginia Panel Corporation, Virginia Power, Waynesboro DuPont Employees Credit Union, Wayn-Tex and Williams Supply.

LearnInc works with companies to identify training needs and design programs tailor-made for them. It offers courses in, among other things, workplace communication skills, managing change, leadership development for women, supervisory skills, sexual harassment awareness, diversity in the workplace, business literacy, leading vs. managing, and human resource management certification.

ADP Growing, Getting Younger and Getting Wired

Annual statistics on ADP graduates show that the ADP student body continues to get younger. Thirty-eight percent of 1999 graduates were in their 20s when they entered ADP, while 35% were in their 30s and only 27% were age 40 or older; in the early years of the program almost all students were age 35 or older.

The statistics also indicate that most graduates continue to complete their degrees within three to four years of coming to ADP.

A study last year showed that ADP retention rates are running way ahead of the national average for nontraditional learners. On average, 78% of ADP students return the following year for more coursework; that compares to a national year-to-year adult student retention ratio of 61%. Also, 44% of all ADP students graduate from MBC within five years, while the national average for older learners is 31%.

As more and more adult learners are saying they want the convenience of on-line instruction, ADP on-line instruction continues to expand. Last fall ADP offered two on-line tutorials. This past spring eight sections were offered. Five more sections were offered in the summer, and this semester of ADP has 13 on-line courses.

Another area of growth for ADP has been its Richmond center. Last year saw rapid growth in both the ADP and MAT student bodies in that part of the state. The center added three classrooms, a larger storage area and a small student lounge. It now takes up one whole side of the ground floor of the Libbie Square office building in Richmond.

Widely Exhibited Artist Visits Campus as Fourth Doenges Artist/Scholar

Melissa Miller, the latest Elizabeth Kirkpatrick Doenges Artist/Scholar, was on campus from November 9 to 12, with a public presentation on November 10. She will return to work with students in more depth during the three-week May Term.

Melissa Miller is widely known for her expressionistic paintings that use animals as metaphors for human observations and dilemmas. She has exhibited work at many of the major museums in America. These include the Hirshhorn and Corcoran Museums, the Brooklyn Museum of Fine Arts, the New Orleans Museum, the San Francisco Museum, and the Fine Arts Museums in Houston, Dallas and Ft. Worth. Her work has also been included in the prestigious Whitney Biennial and the Venice Biennial.

Born in Houston, Texas, in 1951, Miller received a bachelor of fine arts degree from the University of New Mexico in 1964. The artist is the recipient of three individual artist fellowships from the National Endowment for the Arts. In 1987, Miller was named "Texas Artist of the Year," and in 1999, she received the Legend Award from the Dallas Visual Arts Association. Her works can be found in many public collections, including the Museum of Modern Art, the Houston Museum of Fine Arts, the National Museum of Women and the Honolulu Contemporary Museum.

Miller has been a visiting lecturer and guest artist at numerous universities and art institutes. She served as the distinguished visiting professor of art at Southern Methodist University in 1990-91 and most recently as visiting professor of art at the University of Texas, Austin. Her workshop experience includes Anderson Ranch, Oklahoma Arts Institute and Skowhegan School of Painting and Sculpture.

U.S. News and World Report Rates Mary Baldwin College in the Top Ten Once Again

U.S. News and World Report has ranked Mary Baldwin College among the top ten regional liberal arts colleges in the South for the seventh year in a row. Competing with 130 other liberal arts colleges in the South, MBC was ranked sixth. In addition to Mary Baldwin, three other Virginia colleges made the top ten in this category: Emory & Henry College, Roanoke College, and Eastern Mennonite University.

"Rankings are not nearly as important as whether a college is right for an individual student – it is the 'fit' that determines how well a student will thrive, grow and learn. But of course, we are pleased that once again we have fared well in the rankings. It means that prospective students will take the time to look at Mary Baldwin to see if it is right for them," said Dr. Cynthia H. Tyson, president of MBC.

U.S. News and World Report assesses colleges using objective statistical criteria such as student selectivity, faculty resources, graduation and retention rates, as well as academic reputation among college presidents, deans and admissions directors. The college ranked particularly well in the area of academic reputation.

alumnae news

I hope you all had a fun-filled summer. The fall season is here, and Mary Baldwin is painted in an array of splendid colors. It is always exciting to be on campus, especially when the Alumnae Association Board of Directors is planning for another year.

As you all know, the year 2000 will bring many celebrations. A special event for many of you will be your reunion during Homecoming 2000, May 19 - 21. I urge you to be in touch with your roommates and classmates so you can make plans to be a part of your reunion. Early planning and calling is the key to a successful reunion.

Speaking of starts - have you started your Christmas list yet? Why not look through the Mary Baldwin Sampler and find gifts to send to relatives and friends. We have a wonderful selection and many of our items can only be found in the Sampler. Get a head start on your Christmas shopping, and support the Alumnae Association. Monies raised from Sampler sales are used by the Alumnae Association to help the college in numerous ways, from scholarships to refurbishing Spencer Lounge.

I look forward to seeing many of you this year as I visit various cities attending events.

I send my fondest regards to each of you.

20th Anniversary of Award-Winning Theatre Wagon Film

In honor of its 20th anniversary and a reunion of its cast, the film The Visit to the Sepulcher — or Visitatio Sepulchri in its original Latin was shown in Mary Baldwin College's Francis Auditorium on August 6.

The Visitatio is a medieval music drama that relates the Gospel story of the first Easter. The Staunton-based Theatre Wagon, with Dr. Fletcher Collins as executive producer, traveled to France in the summer of 1979 to film the medieval masterpiece in period costume in the 10th-century abbey of Fleury, where the drama originated 800 years ago.

Several members of the original troupe are connected with Mary Baldwin College. Dr. Collins is a professor emeritus of theatre. Linda Dolly Hammack MBC '62, currently a member of the MBC Board of Trustees, served as producer. Custer LaRue Haws '74, a former voice instructor at MBC and now an internationally acclaimed soloist, sang the role of Mary Magdalene. Celia Flow Collins '61 was a guardian angel. Aurelia Crawford '74 sang the role of Mary Jacobi. Carl Edwards, who sang the role of Christ, and Curtis Nolley, in the role of John, have both served on the MBC faculty.

The film had its premiere at the American Film Institute at the Kennedy Center in January 1980. It went on to win the Cine Golden Eagle Award and was a finalist at the American Film Festival. It has been aired on PBS stations across the country as well as at hundreds of colleges and universities, conferences, and symposia.

Dr. Collins, the author of two influential books on medieval music-drama, transcribed and edited the Visitatio from the original manuscript. The production of the film was made possible through a grant from the National Foundation for the Humanities. Mary Baldwin College served as the fiscal agent for that grant. William Ferris, chairman of the National Endowment for the Humanities, writing to congratulate Dr. Collins on the 20th anniversary, said, "Twenty years ago, you led a talented troupe of singers and actors to San Benoit sur Loire in France where you produced and filmed Visitatio Sepulchri in the tenth century Abbey itself. You lovingly brought this ancient liturgical drama to life again on the very site where the play had originally been performed in the twelfth century...

Over the years, the Endowment has sought to support projects that speak to the enduring wisdom and spiritual qualities of the humanities. Your film is one such project, and on those grounds alone congratulations would be due! But the very fact that working with you on Visitatio Sepulchri was such a moving and significant experience for the cast and crew that 20 years later they have traveled far and wide to be with you at your home today makes the anniversary especially [noteworthy]."

Four Alumnae Honored by College

Four Mary Baldwin alumnae were recently granted trustee emerita status by the Board of Trustees: Caroline Rose Hunt '43, Margaret Hunt Hill '37, Bertie Deming Smith '46 and Anna Kate Reid Hipp '63. As trustees emerita, they will have the right to attend all meetings of the Board of Trustees and will receive all Board of Trustees communications.

In May, President Tyson traveled to Dallas, TX to recognize the exemplary service of sisters and former trustees Caroline Rose Hunt and Margaret Hunt Hill.

Caroline Rose Hunt served on the Board of Trustees for 20 years, from 1977 to 1998. In addition, she has helped to fund various building and renovation projects and has established two academic chairs.

Margaret Hunt Hill served as a trustee from 1957 to 1958. Like her sister, she has supported the college through the years by helping to fund capital projects, the endowment and general operations.

Bertie Deming Smith served on the Board of Trustees for over 30 years, from 1963 to 1996. In 1983, MBC dedicated the Deming Fine Arts Center in her honor. In 1990, she created the first endowed professorial chair at the college, the Bertie Wilson Murphy Distinguished Chair in Business Administration. She received an honorary doctorate of humane letters from the college, as well as a Sesquicentennial Medallion and the Algernon Sydney Sullivan Award for "lasting contributions and inspirational leadership." In 1997, the college established a new award in her honor, the Bertie Murphy Deming Distinguished Service Medallion, to be given to those who have provided extraordinary service to the college over a significant period of time. She was the first recipient of that award.

Anna Kate Hipp served on the Board of Trustees for over 25 years, first joining in 1972. She served as the national co-chair of the college's $35 million Sesquicentennial Campaign, and was the first alumna to chair the board. In 1978, the college awarded her with the Algernon Sydney Sullivan Award for nobility of character and unselfish service to the college and community. She was further honored with a Sesquicentennial Medallion in 1992 and an honorary doctorate of humane letters. In 1994, the Alumnae Association presented her with the Emily Wirsing Kelly Leadership Award.

Alumnae Represent Mary Baldwin at College Inaugurations

President Cynthia H. Tyson is often invited to participate in inaugural ceremonies for new presidents of other colleges and universities. If she is unable to attend, she often asks that a trustee, alumna, or friend of Mary Baldwin represent her and the college. The representative dons academic gown, cap and hood, and takes part in the academic procession. Not only is the experience enjoyable for the alumna, but Mary Baldwin benefits from the public recognition of our standing in the academic community. Many thanks go to those listed to the right who have represented Mary Baldwin at college and university inaugurations throughout the country.

Bill Goodson – Special Forces Takes on ADP

BY SARAH COX

Bill Goodson ADP '98 is as proud of his degree from Mary Baldwin as he is of anything he's done – and that says a lot.

In 1972, after one year on a partial swimming scholarship at UNC-Asheville, Goodson joined the Army with plans to earn some money and return to college. Then he was recruited by the Green Berets and began what turned out to be a 26-year career with them, spending six to nine months of every year doing "action guy stuff," as he describes it. He was trained as a weapons and medical specialist, then was promoted into operations and eventually became a sergeant major. His work with the Green Berets has taken him to 33 countries, including Iraq, Lebanon, Spain and Norway.

A highlight of Goodson's career was competing in the Best Ranger Competition in 1990. Rated the fourth most difficult contest in the world, it requires three days of competitions and allows about one-and-one-half hours of sleep. Goodson and his partner were in their late 30s – old men, he says, compared with the rest of the competitors.

The first test, the Army PT test, required 82 push-ups in two minutes and running two miles in under 11.40 minutes. Then Goodson and his partner, wearing 55-pound backpacks, dragged a canoe one mile through a dry creekbed. They parachuted, competed in marksmanship, ran and walked 26 miles in under six hours (with the backpacks), navigated through woods at night, dropped out of a helicopter 400 yards offshore (with the backpacks), and finally, in Georgia summer heat, completed a 2.3 mile buddy run in 22 minutes wearing boots and all their equipment. Goodson came in fifth.

In 1995, needing a break from the constant travel, Goodson took an assignment at Virginia Military Institute in Lexington, VA, teaching R.O.T.C. This seemed like a good time to finish the degree he had started so long ago, and people told him the best way to do that was through the Adult Degree Program at Mary Baldwin College.

He was a bit skeptical at first: "Here is this private women's college which is pretty liberal and has no clue of the military," he thought. Then he met his counselor, Professor of Education and Adult Studies James Harrington, a former lieutenant in the Army in Vietnam. Together they mapped out a plan for Goodson's degree in business, settling on two courses per semester.

After Goodson's tour of duty at VMI ended, he was sent to Norway, then to Turkey on training assignments. "His service took him to hot spots all over the world," recalled Harrington, "some of which he could tell us about and some of which he couldn't. He mailed and faxed and emailed his work from places like Bosnia. He did great work and almost always met his deadlines."

Goodson was impressed with the college's flexibility. "Mary Baldwin said no matter where you go, we will continue to help you with your education."

In May 1998, Goodson walked across the stage at MBC to receive his degree and to share the 1998 Outstanding Adult Degree student award, having earned a 3.8 grade point average. "When I was asked to join the Green Berets," he explained, "I knew this was the cream of the crop, and once I went through training and found out I could compete at any level, I made it a goal that whatever school the Army sent me to, I would try to be the distinguished honor graduate. I shot for number one."

Goodson had just gotten settled at

Ft. Collins in Colorado Springs, CO, in 1998 and was running the day-to-day operations, when he learned that the Army planned to move him again. He decided it was time to try life on the civilian side. He is now living with his family in Colorado Springs and working in sales for Serle Pharmaceuticals. "Pharmaceutical companies like to hire military because of our ability to get things done. And one of the reasons I got this job was because of my four-year degree from Mary Baldwin."

Goodson says the transition from military to civilian life has not been hard at all. He's just done what he's always done – welcomed the challenge.

A Day at the White House

BY MARY MORRISON '95

It is difficult to describe a typical day for me as the special assistant to the director of Oval Office Operations at the White House, but I can say this: it is never routine. I begin my day with two things: the president's daily schedule and my "to do" list, yet these two items merely create a skeleton of how my long day may develop.

After graduating from Mary Baldwin in the spring of 1995 with a bachelor's degree in international business, I applied for two different positions: a White House internship and a job teaching tennis with Club Med. Club Med offered me a position in a resort in Mexico in November of 1995. In July, I found out that I had been accepted as a White House intern for the fall session and selected for an assignment in the president's office.

The director of Oval Office Operations, Nancy Herreich, told me that one of the reasons I was accepted was because of my involvement with the Mary Baldwin Alumnae Association. This indicated to her that I had the ability to interact and work well with others.

Nancy was also impressed with the high value I place on organization. This was just one of the many skills I learned from the late MBC professor Gordon Hammock. Four years later, I have realized how much Professor Hammock, "GH," truly prepared me for my career. In each of his classes he emphasized courtesy, neatness, honesty, kindness, humility, preparation and knowledge.

I remember walking into the White House on my first day as an intern in early September 1995. I had grown up in Arlington, VA, right across the bridge from Washington. I had been by the White House millions of times – always standing on the outside of the fence. This time I was standing inside. The feelings I had that day of awe and amazement are the feelings I still have each morning when I walk through the White House gates.

In November of 1995, I left the White House to teach tennis at Club Med in Huatulco, Mexico. There, I worked 18-hour days, met fascinating people from all over the world, used my fluent Spanish and Portuguese (my first language, my mother being from Brazil), and practiced my conversational French.

I was there for six months, returning to Washington in May of 1996 to take a job in the President's Scheduling Office as the special assistant to the president's scheduler. The process and the formation of the president's schedule is more complicated than most people could imagine. I stayed in this job until June of 1998, when I was promoted to my current position.

As the special assistant to the director of Oval Office Operations, I serve two functions – as Nancy Herreich's special assistant and as a member of a team, Oval Office Operations, whose primary function is to assist in the day-to-day operation of the president's office.

I serve as the liaison between the president, his friends and his family. They often call with various requests or messages they would like to get to the president. One thing I have learned is to say no graciously, which is definitely an art. The president's most precious commodity is time, and unfortunately there is never enough of it.

It is an honor to spend part of my day greeting some of the president's visitors – foreign leaders, Hollywood stars, musical greats, politicians, sports teams, and most important to the president – everyday Americans. Some of the people I have met include Senator/Astronaut Glenn, Queen Noor of Jordan, the late Princess Diana, U2, The Women's World Cup Soccer Team, Senator Dole, Pete Sampras, Whoopi Goldberg and Rosa Parks. Preparation for the president's weekly radio address to the nation is one of my main responsibilities. I compile the 100-person guest list, welcome the visitors to the White House, give them a tour of the West Wing and introduce them to the president.

I have also had the opportunity to travel on behalf of the president to Brazil and to China, each time as part of an advance team. Advance teams are comprised of 8 to 10 people who travel ahead of the president and arrange logistics for an official presidential visit.

Working in the White House has given me the chance to serve the nation and to feel that I am contributing in some small way to the administration of a president who cares deeply about this country, its people and the world. President Clinton has done a great deal for the American people and the international community. I am grateful for the opportunity to be here.

Young persons interested in becoming White House interns should contact Patrick Crawford, director of the White House Intern Program at 202-456-2742.
